

Friday @ the Center: March 7, 2008

As everyone is frantically busy during this last week of the quarter, F @ the Center is keeping it brief.

- Course Evaluations: instructor signup is open until midnight tonight (extended because of technical difficulties).
- Congratulations! to Professor of Art Roger Feldman, who has been accepted into the seminar “Christianity and the Visual Arts in Indonesia,” sponsored by the Council for Christian Colleges and Universities, the Calvin College Nagel Institute, and the Asian Christian Artists Association. He’ll be travelling to Indonesia in June.
- Congratulations! to Assistant Professor of Theology Daniel Castelo, who has been accepted into the summer workshop, “Christian Hymnody in Historical Perspective,” sponsored by the Calvin Seminars in Christian Scholarship. Alas, Daniel only gets to go to Grand Rapids in June.
- Congratulations! to Assistant Professor of Biochemistry Ben McFarland, who received a two-year grant of $210,760 from the National Institute of Health for his work on “Redesigning NKG2D--MIC-A Interaction Kinetics.”
- It could be worse: the great British poet Gerard Manley Hopkins worked as an examiner in Greek at University College Dublin and once lamented in a letter that he had “577 papers on hand” to read, continuing, “let those who have been thro’ the like say what that means.”

Briefly,

Susan
